“ I think of Cheri every Thanksgiving. Many years ago I was tasked with preparing the turkey. I had never cooked one before. I thought it would be foolproof because all I had to do was wait for the "red button" to pop up when it was done. Little did I know I had removed the button when I crammed in the stuffing (which you also are not supposed to do). As the hours went by, the turkey kept smelling good and I kept checking for the red button. Finally, when the kitchen was smoking, I looked and there was a gaping hole where the button was supposed to be. It was not a good meal at all. The next day I was helping Cheri with her health insurance. I told her what happened and she slapped her towel on the table and shouted, "If you EVER need help cooking ANYTHING, but especially a damn turkey, call me! I will be right down - SERIOUSLY!" For years after, I'd call her after Thanksgiving and tell her I did all right and she'd chuckle and say, "I'm here if you need me."

I will always remember you Cheri, and especially on Thanksgiving. I didn't call you the day after this year and I am so sad I didn't. Rest in peace dear lady.
